

Hippos for Humanity

What is of more value than hippos? Among numerous ways to use one-hundred thousand dollars, the best way is to buy hippos. If I had the money I would buy hippos, and give the hippos to society, where hippos are needed in the world. I would freely give a hippo to everybody, along with a kiddie pool, as hippos like water. By doing this, I would help society. There are many reasons hippos are needed.

All children should have their very own hippo. Hippos bring bliss to the children. Take one incident for example, of “The Great Monkeys Bring Bliss to Children” experiment. Supposedly monkeys bring bliss to children. Unfortunately, this venture ended in failure as the monkeys had fleas, which ended up on some old granny’s wig. Besides this, orphans need hippos. If every orphan had a hippo, life would be adventure, not loneliness. Hippos are even better than puppies. In the great “Puppies for Parentless” trial, every child was given a pit bull. One little girl was dragged into a bakery, by a pit bull, and flew into a custard pie, which flew straight into her face. Needless to say, hippos do not charge into bakeries. Children like bakeries and hippos. This is all the more reason to give them each their own hippo.

Because hippos would make wonderful watch dogs, every government official should have one. Watch hippos would be even better than watch dogs. In the try out “Poodles Patrol for Government Officials,” an intruder crept in. Instead of guarding the official, the poodle slunk off, and the official was injured, by the intruder, who stuffed his passage ways with frosting. Hippos are not just fluff and stuffing, but have a thick hide. Not only that, but who could ride a dog to escape? A government official could ride a hippo to escape to safety. This is just another way hippos show their helpfulness to humanity.

Hospitals should have hippos. Hippos could cheer sick people up by butting their loving heads at them. Certainly, they could do a better job than clowns, who inevitably trip over their big shoes and end up in the coulrophobia (the exaggerated fear of clowns) children's ward. Clowns have been deemed funny only in a frightening sort of way. Perhaps it is due to the fact that hippos have not been introduced to society much, but there is not any condition or phobia concerning them. They only cheer up people with their cute faces and lead a charge.

These three reasons are not the only reasons people should have hippos. There are many other reasons people should have hippos, such as "The Need for Hippos in Hotels", but I do not have time to go into them. Some people wonder how one-hundred thousand dollars will be enough to buy hippos for everybody. It won't. I have that all worked out. In every bunch of people, there are a few who do not like change and will refuse a hippo. These people will be fined a million dollars each. Using the million dollars, we can buy hippos for the rest of the world and fund our great cause: Everyone needs a hippo. Any man who gives one-hundred thousand dollars to our quest and helps feed hungry hippos shall be richly blessed.
